

Media Release

MASTER BUILDERS
A U S T R A L I A

19 December 2014

Builders Welcome IR Inquiry's Productivity Focus

Ensuring the workplace relations system promotes productivity, is essential for a strong building and construction industry.

"The industry needs a flexible workplace system to drive productivity so that it can play its role in meeting the community's infrastructure and housing needs," Wilhelm Harnisch CEO of Master Builders Australia said.

"Master Builders welcomes the release of the terms of reference for the Productivity Commission's inquiry into the workplace relations system. They are appropriately broad and provide an opportunity to closely examine all the factors that can contribute to lifting productivity," he said.

"The inquiry will be an important tool in tackling the nation's demographic and economic challenges" Wilhelm Harnisch said.

For more information contact:

Wilhelm Harnisch, CEO, 0402 032 032
Ben Carter, Manager Media & Communications, 0447 775 507