

Union Right of Entry

Builders need to be aware of their rights and obligations under the state & federal right of entry laws on safety to avoid unintentionally being exposed to allegations of committing any breaches.

The union can, and has, taken federal court legal action to press its claims of being denied entry to site so builders need to know their rights.

Master Builders is conducting an important workshop for commercial builder members about the contentious issue of union right of entry to investigate alleged safety breaches on site.

Master Builders is aware the CFMEU has recently been seeking right of entry under the WA Industrial Relations Act to investigate alleged safety breaches of the OSH Act.

This can cause confusion with builders, and their site supervisors, who at times are unaware of what rights they have when it comes to dealing with a union demand such as this (e.g. what the builder's obligations are, as well as what rights and obligations the union has to meet).

Master Builders is facilitating this workshop with Kemp & Associates to address this important issue on Wednesday 15 May.
